This course introduces the student to the foundational concepts of teaching competencies and understanding the learner, in the context of the digital age. Digital technologies are changing the way that teachers plan, curate resources, organise content delivery and manage classroom behaviour. Digital devices both make new types of learning activities possible, and at the same time highlight how learner preferences and competencies for digital learning vary. This course will explore these issues, as well as how to maximise motivation for learning in a digital learning environment. The role of assessment of learners' achievement and evaluation of effective teaching and learning in digital environments is also explored.
